

U. L. & T. WINS SAFETY MEDAL

The Utah Light and Traction company has been awarded the Anthony N. Brady memorial medal for the second consecutive year for an outstanding achievement in accident prevention, according to word received by tram officials from New York Saturday.

The award is presented annually through the American Museum of Safety to the company having the best safety record among the electric railways in the United States and Canada.

With 202 mishaps the local company in 1934 had the lowest number of accidents resulting from collisions between trams and pedestrians, collisions between trams and vehicles, passengers boarding or alighting from cars or passengers falling in cars. The greatest number of accidents, 91, came from street car-automobile collisions.

The safety statistics submitted to win the medal showed a ratio of one accident every 16,390 miles of street car operation, one for every 48,647 miles of gas bus operation and one for every 21,632 miles of electric coach operation.

The memorial medal was authorized in 1914 by the Brady family to stimulate conservation of human life and accident prevention among the electric railways in the United States and Canada.
